welcomed the guest and addressed the gathering. Further, Dr. Shikha Bharadwaj was invited on stage to facilitate the FDP.

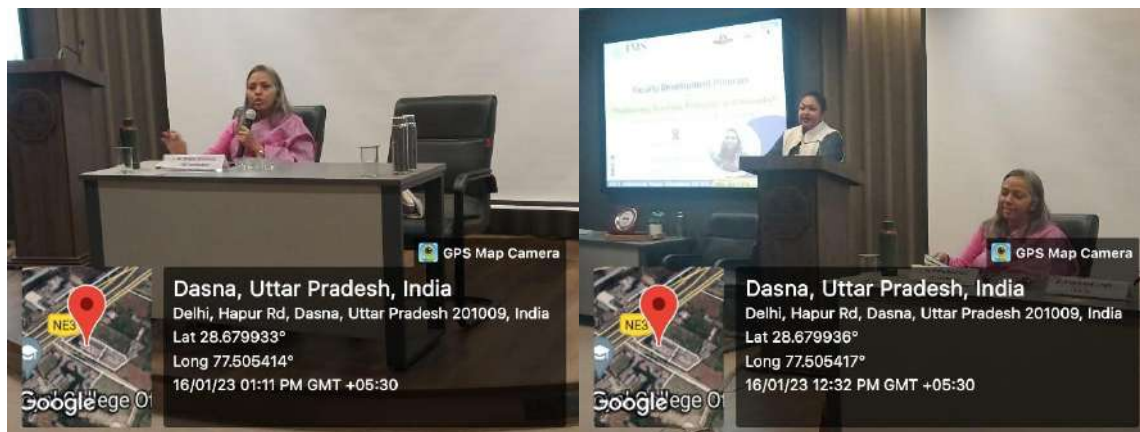

Dr. Bharadwaj is Professor of Organizational Behavior and Human Resources at the Indian Institute of Management, Sambalpur. She shared her passion for teaching and research. She started the session with a question: "What pedagogy did the professors employ in class?" Faculties gave their inputs on storytelling, the use of social media like showing advertisements, assessments, and sharing practical corporate experiences with real-life examples. After hearing all of the faculty responses, Dr. Bharadwaj concluded that using new technologies for students is our main takeaway. Our Special Guest, Dr. Shikha, spoke on the landscape of higher education, the opportunities for differentiation, and success. She discussed the factors that should be considered to take higher education to the next level.

The session was a complete hands-on of some popular learning tools that would help students and teachers interact, collaborate, and practice technical concepts in class. Dr. Shikha Bharadwaj led the session with an interactive hands-on practice using four (4) tools, like, firstly, the case study method; she said this method is the one that helps students learn through practice. She suggested that the case studies should be original ones from your own life experiences and that quoting different case studies with real-time scenarios was key aspect of the session. Second, she shared insights on how not to teach too much to students, recommending that 35 minutes be set aside for discussing topics and the remaining minutes be used for peer enrichment of students; and third, she advised faculty to assign heavy assignments to students. Fourthly, she proposed to allow at least 4 sessions with different domain experts interacting with your subject. Lastly, Q&A and discussion on topics like how to make the teaching process more collaborative and enhance the self-motivation levels of students for learning. She spoke about designing and delivering effective learning experiences and the importance of active participation by students, positive leadership, live discussions, instant quizzes, and polls, and invited speakers during subject classes. Some key aspects of the design and delivery, including curriculum design, class management, communication, feedback, and assessment of student's performance, were discussed and shared by her.

The session ended with the faculty receiving recommendations to improve their research practices. She concluded her session by emphasizing the importance of research as a pedagogical tool and advising faculties to do more research for their own careers and learning.

Event Name: Peer Enrichment Talk Series	Date & Day: 1 st October, 2022, Saturday
Guest / Trainer Name: Dr. Tanushri Chatterji	Designation/Organization: Assistant Professor, School of Biosciences, IMS University Courses Campus
Topic: “Metabolomic study in body fluids for differentiation of meningitis in adults: A pilot study”	Schedule Timing: 4:00 PM onwards
Number of Faculty: 06	Venue: Room No. 405
Budget Approved: NA	Total Expenditure: NA

Summary of the Event:

In its pursuit for excellence in academics, School of Biosciences organized Peer Enrichment Talk Series on a continuous basis. Such type of activities generally focuses on enhancing and developing academic standards by engaging the individuals in high level of discussion with their peers. At the same time, it helps to develop interpersonal skills. In this reference, Dr. Tanushri Chatterji, Assistant Professor, School of Biosciences delivered her talk on “Metabolomic study in body fluids for differentiation of meningitis in adults: A pilot study” and was attended by her peers in faculty of Biosciences.

Dr. Tanushri conducted her study at Dr Ram Manohar Lohia Institute of Medical Sciences and Centre of Biomedical Research, Lucknow. The study was ethically approved by the Institutional Ethics Committee (IEC 14/11). In the tenure, 115 subjects were enrolled. The study focused on the differentiation of bacterial meningitis and tubercular meningitis with control subjects in adults using the body fluids (CSF, serum and urine). Initially, she presented the clinical manifestations associated with the infection and bottlenecks regarding diagnosis of the disease. Therefore, the study was designed with an attempt of appropriate and timely treatment regimen.

The study attempted to observe the variation in the metabolic profile, that occur in serum and urine along with CSF in adult subjects using ^1H NMR spectroscopy. Primarily, microbiological assessment was performed by culture and sensitivity, isolation and identification of bacterial species using manual as well as automated techniques and biochemical tests were performed.

Further, followed with NMR based metabolomics and multivariate analysis. Using this approach, she identified small molecular weight metabolites that affect specific biological pathways, metabolic derangements was observed and made attempts to explore their utility in clinical diagnosis.

The statistical analyses performed on the NMR data set of the three bio-fluids collectively identified 3-hydroxyisovalerate, lactate, glucose, formate, valine, alanine, ketonic bodies, malonate and choline containing compounds (choline and GPC) as significant metabolites among cases vs. control group.

Learning Outcome:

The peer enrichment series was highly informative and showed novel means that advocates integrated platform for rapid and accurate NMR based metabolite identification on meningitis cases. This pilot study demonstrated the potential for a metabolomic differentiation of bacterial and tubercular meningitis in adults using urine as a bio-fluid. Though, it further requires validation on a larger sample cohort.
